The future is JavaScript. The future is dark.

mrorbitman(19|3)

hahah. Some of the languages that compile to js (such as coffeescript and dart) have excellent reviews. And with V8, javascript is actually pretty good in terms of performance. There is hope for a JS future!

ikertxu(10|0)

If the future of JS is CoffeeScript and languages alike, then it is indeed a dark future. Because learning a high-level language that compiles into another high-level language just to save on keystrokes, then is fucking pitch black.

I'm hoping more on ES6 to adapt the good stuff from CoffeeScript on its standards and have it all included in V8 in all browsers rather than abstract the process creating yet another layer of high-level language.

ThatOnePerson(9|1)

Don't forget that with Emscripten we've got LLVM compiling to Javascript!

munificent(19|1)

All the performance of a dynamic language, and the ease of use of manual memory management in C!

NotEnoughBears(12|0)

I like javascript because it's close to the metal.

This is a great talk. He really blends the optimism and pessimism of JS's future very well.
