Calibrating the Altimeter and Clearing HIGH and ACC

Calibration in ALTI mode allows you to calibrate the pressure sensor for improved accuracy as well as clear the HIGH and ACC data values.

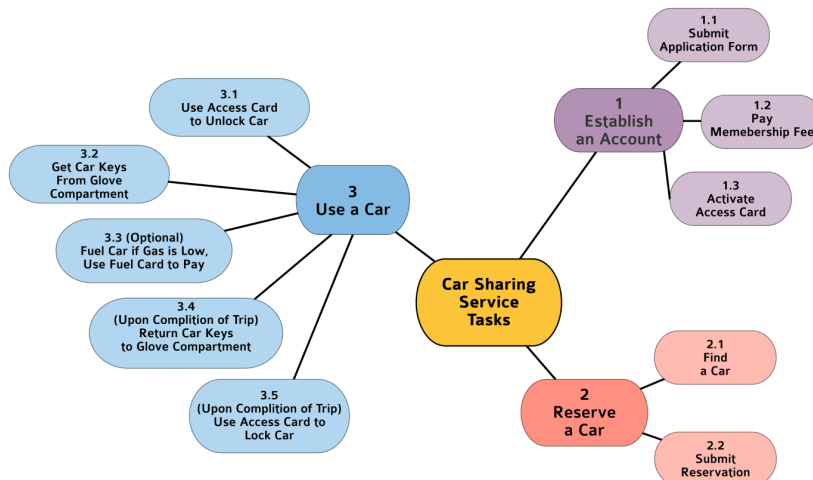

Calibration operates exactly like setting, so refer to the section entitled "Setting Operation" on page 11 to understand how the buttons function during setting.

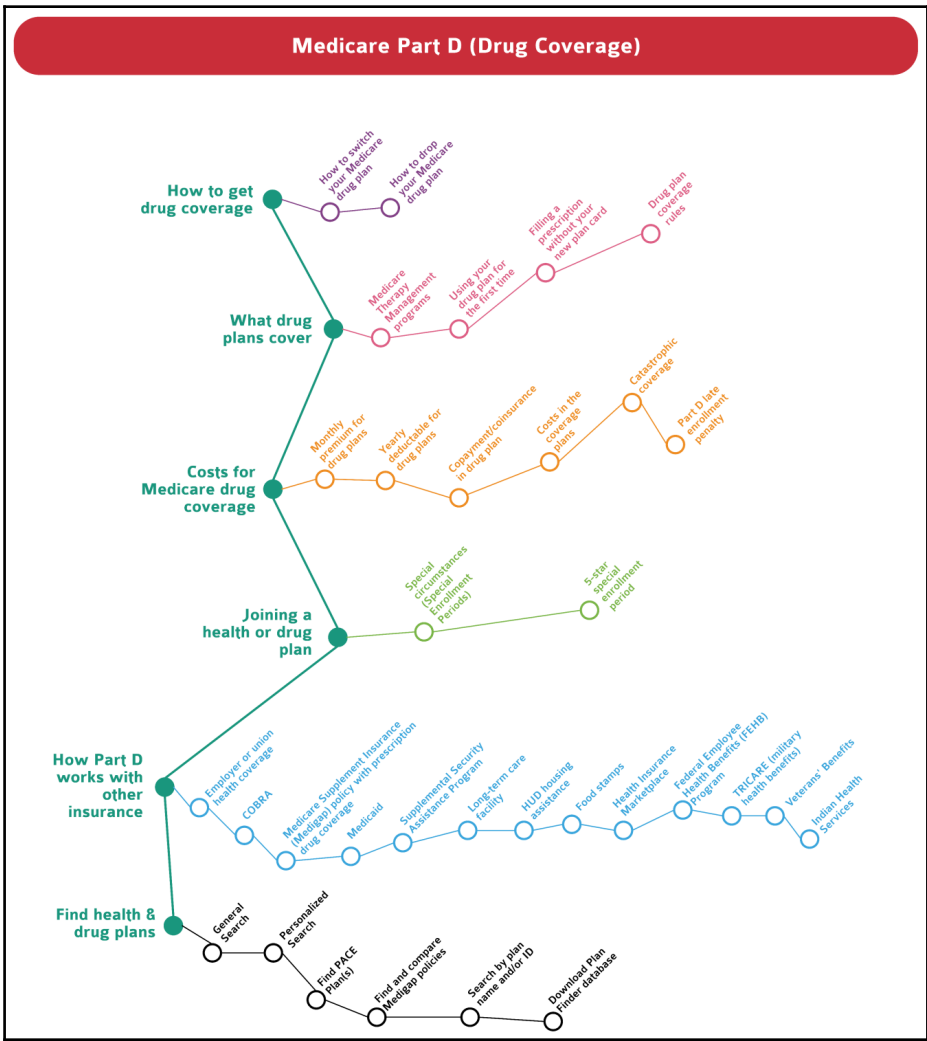

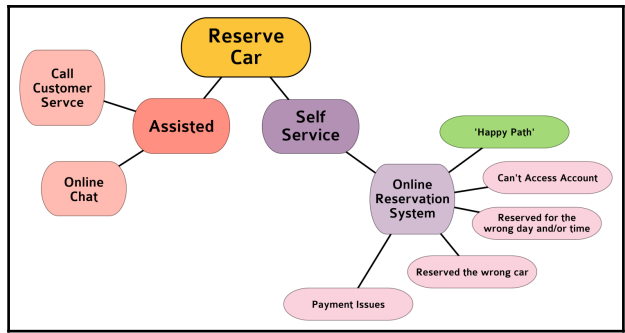

Also refer to the section entitled "Notes on calibrating the Altimeter and Barometer" on page 15 for general information regarding calibration.

For proper calibration, adjust the "CAL" value to reflect your actual altitude. The "CAL" value can be set to a value from -2296 ft (-700m) to +26520 ft (+9000m).

- 1 Press and hold SET until the word "CAL" appears in the upper line of the display and the sign of the calibration value is flashing.
- 2 Press START/SPLIT to adjust the sign (positive for altitudes above sea level, negative for altitudes below).
- 3 Press MODE to move on to adjusting the current altitude value.
- 4 Using START/SPLIT (to increase) and STOP/RESET (to decrease), adjust flashing value.
- 5 Repeat steps 3 and 4 for each value of the calibration altitude.
- 6 Press MODE to move on to enable clearing of the HIGH data value. "HIGH" will be flashing in the upper line; the current value for the highest altitude will be displayed.
- 7 Press and hold START/SPLIT to clear the value, if desired.

Popovers

A popover is a view that appears above other content onscreen when you click a control or view. For example, Calendar displays event information in a popover when you double-click an event. Typically, a popover includes an arrow pointing to the location from which it emerged. Popovers also support vibrancy.

A popover can close in response to a user interaction (transient behavior), in response to a user's interaction with the view or element from which the popover emerged (semitransient behavior), or in an app-defined way. A popover can also be made detachable. A detachable popover becomes a separate window when dragged by the user, allowing it to remain visible onscreen while the user interacts with other content.

Use a popover to expose only a small amount of occasionally needed functionality. Since a popover disappears after the user interacts with it, the user can spend more time focusing on content and less time removing clutter from their workspace.

Consider using popovers instead of temporary views like sidebars and panels. Popovers can help you streamline your interface, leaving more room for content.

Enable a closure behavior that makes sense based on the popover's function. In general, a popover should close automatically when its presence is no longer needed. If a popover merely presents a set of choices, consider closing it as soon as the user makes a selection—the same way a menu behaves. When multiple selections can be made, a popover should remain open until someone explicitly dismisses it or clicks outside of its bounds.

Provide a Close button for confirmation or guidance only. A Close button, such as Cancel or Done, is worth including only if it provides clarity, such as exiting with or without saving changes.

Always save work when automatically closing a popover automatically. It's often easy to dismiss a popover unintentionally by clicking another area onscreen. Discard work only when someone clicks an explicit Cancel button.

Position popovers appropriately onscreen. A popover's arrow should point as directly as possible to the element that revealed it. A popover also shouldn't cover the element that was clicked to show the popover.
